To linger round us longest.

But we would teach our hearts to drein

The sweetest drops the strongest ;

Let us forget its toil and care.

The darkest shadows of the night

Are just before the morning;

Then let us wait the coming light,

And while we're passing on the tide

Of Time's fast obbing river,

Let's pluck the blossoms by its side,

And bless its Gracious Giver.

And boding phantoms scorning :

As life is somet mes bright and fair,

And note its bright hours only

As life is sometimes bright and fair,

And sometimes dark and lonely,

We should forget its pain and care,

And note its bright hours only.

Not a laugh was heard, nor a joyous note,

For our friend to the bridal we hurried.

We married him quickly to save his fright,

Our heads from the sad sight turning.

To think that he was no more discerning.

To think that a bachelor free and bright,

And shy of the girls as we found him.

Few and short were the words we said,

Though we heartily ate of the cake,

And thought how awfully he'll shake!

We thought as we hollowed his lowly bed.

Of the birch, the beech, and the willow,

And every Old Bach will apbraid me,

But half of our heavy task was done.

Would never be won by another.

Slowly and sadly we marched down

From the top of the up ermost story,

Whom we left not alone, in his glory.

And the tears he would shed on his pillow.

But nothing I'll reck if they'll let me sleep on.

'Ere the clock tolled the hour for the other ;
